Fruity finds for fall

FEATHERSTONE FOUR FEATHERS 2016
VQA Twenty Mile Bench,
Niagara Escarpment, Ontario
341586 (D) 750 mL $14.95

TASTING NOTE: This value-laden, harmonious blend of Riesling, Chardonnay, Gewürztraminer and Sauvignon Blanc expresses aromas and flavours typical of each grape varietal. Orchard fruit, zippy citrus, exotic tropical fruit layered with hints of rose and ginger aromas on the nose provide segue to a mouth-watering wash of crisp apple, ripe pear and peach on the palate. Medium bodied and slightly off-dry, it offers a fresh fruit finish perfect with pan-seared white fish. Score: ★★★★☆ (Lisa Isabelle, winecurrent.com, April 24, 2017)

TASTING NOTE: Fresh and floral red displaying red and black cherries, red plums and raspberries. Full body, ripe and silky tannins and a fresh, fruity finish. Drink now. Score: 91 (James Suckling, jamessuckling.com, Dec. 1, 2016)

Full-bodied & Smooth
When it comes to winemaking, Ontario is blessed with an ideal climate and exceptional soils; producers in Ontario could seemingly make great wine in their sleep. The reality? Fine winemaking is a complex process that takes years to master. Here, six local producers give us a glimpse at the knowledge, dedication and elbow grease that goes into crafting every bottle. The 20 wines in this collection are testament that this labour of love reaps big rewards.
Pouring a glass of wine to share with friends, for that special dinner, or just to kick back and commune with your inner self, represents the final stage in a wine’s life cycle — but the story of your perfect glass of wine, no matter where in the world it originated, began long before your trip to Vintages. Every glass of wine is a testament to the effort, skill and dedication of winemakers at every stage of its development. Where a producer chooses to plant, how they prune, when they harvest, how they crush, ferment and age, and how they determine the final blend is a labour of love that spans all four seasons. Here, we detail six key stages in the life of a wine that show how, while Ontario winemakers may not actually pour their wine for you, they’ve poured their hearts into it.
TAKING ROOT

Ilya and Nadia Senchuk of Leaning Post plant vines – and a future for their young family – at their fledgling winery.

Is this the first time you’ve planted a vineyard?

Ilya: It’s the first time we’ve planted a vineyard that’s our own. My first taste of vine planting was in 2002, working with Daniel Lenko. I was a winemaker for 12 seasons before we started Leaning Post. We bought our farm in 2011 and planted the vines in 2013.

Nadia: Our name, Leaning Post, comes from the actual leaning posts at the end of each vineyard row. Just like the vines needed the support of frames and wires, we needed the support of friends and family.

Ilya: (Laughs) Polite people said we were brave, blunt people said we were crazy!

Nadia: It was such a momentous day for us, quite literally putting down roots in Niagara. There’s a stereotype about people who start wineries that they must be wealthy and looking for a retirement project. Not us. This is what we built our life around. We want our children to grow up in the vineyard.
How do you decide what, and where, to plant?

Ilya: You start with the grape varieties, and look for the right vineyard site for those varieties. We were looking for Pinot Noir and Chardonnay sites. Our property is just Pinot Noir and Chardonnay, split almost fifty-fifty, on five acres. Our vineyard is quite near Lake Ontario, so it’s cooled by lake breezes and gives us that slow, gradual ripening to create those great flavours with classic body and elegance. We knew if we found the right place, these grapes would make wines that tasted truly unique and didn’t taste like anyone else’s.

Is vineyard planting more science or instinct?

Ilya: Definitely a bit of both. I studied science at the University of Manitoba, then graduated from CCOVI (Cool Climate Oenology and Viticulture Institute, at Brock University) in 2003. My background in the wine business and my experiences helped us with site selection, but it’s still a leap of faith.

Nadia: There’s far too much passion in winemaking to say it’s just a science. What we try to do is find the best vineyard sites and put that into glass, and show what Niagara has to offer. There’s a lot of passion in the process.
In any winemaking region in the world, new or established, before vines can be planted the ideal vineyard location has to be determined – a process that requires considerable analysis including assessing sun exposure, wind and rainfall patterns, irrigation requirements, drainage, the slope of the land, and of course the soil. With location chosen, the soil is readied for planting, which may mean adding nutrients, nitrogen, lime and other necessary components to maximize soil suitability and balance pH levels. The ground must be tilled to a depth of about three feet to aid developing root systems. Decisions are made around how to protect the young vines from pests and the soil from erosion – this can mean planting cover crops such as grass or clover, and even necessitate sheathing individual vines with plastic sleeves. Then there are practical considerations (“can I drive my tractor between the rows?”) and viticultural ones, such as vine density (the spacing of rows and individual vines within those rows), which varies for each variety and impacts the competition for nutrients and sun – too much or too little competition will affect the quality of the final wine.
Using sustainable practices and site-specific intuition, David Johnson and Louise Engel of Featherstone coax great grapes through ever-changing conditions.

What inspired you to learn about viticulture?

Louise: We both grew up on farms, so farming has always been a part of our lifestyles. We met in Guelph at the university and opened a little butcher shop. The more we got interested in food, the more we got interested in wine, so we set our sights on Niagara.

David: The person we bought our farm from was a grape grower of some renown, Roman Prydatkewycz, a lovely gentleman and mentor, and we’d work on a couple of rows with him. (He now works with Vineland Estate Winery, and personally has a prime vineyard site on the Bench.)
Is growing grapes more nature or nurture?

Louise: It’s a partnership. Our choice to grow grapes sustainably and naturally, without a lot of chemicals, is a philosophical one. Beyond that, what we do here is specific to this location. If we were even five kilometers down the road, we might be doing things very differently to suit that environment.

David: You can taste the difference in, say, 2008 versus 2009 vintages. That’s nature. I don’t know of another agricultural practice with such meaningful vintage differences. The biggest job in the vineyard in 2016 was just reacting to the heat and drought of the vintage. You improvise a bit with things like leaf removal to regulate heat and sunlight exposure. We get water for trickle irrigation from a little creek that runs through a limestone quarry and through our property.

What’s the scariest part of the growing season?

David: Threat of hail. A hailstorm lasts for just a second, but can shatter the grapes and destroy your crop for the whole vintage.

What’s the best part of the growing season?

David: The best moment is seeing the wine in the bottle! But it’s also a great feeling when you reach the moment when you see the grapes are ready to be picked.

Louise: It’s satisfying to literally see the fruits of your labour.

FEATHERSTONE FOUR

To limit the need for chemical intervention against pests and disease, Featherstone encourages a healthy growing environment through biodiversity. This four-grape white blend offers orchard and tropical fruit with touches of ginger spice and a mouth-watering acidity.

Like any farm or garden, vineyards require attention throughout the year. One of the most important vineyard practices, pruning, is also one of the more labour-intensive. Summer pruning focuses primarily on the canopy and its function is twofold: controlling leaves helps provide optimal sun exposure to the grapes while directing the vine’s energy to ripening grapes, rather than to the growth of extraneous shoots and leaves. Winter pruning removes unwanted wood and allows the winemaker to select the location and number of buds that will produce fruit the following year. Other ongoing tasks in the vineyard include:

• Irrigation
• Pest control – insects, birds and animals – all of which necessitate specific defense mechanisms.
• Monitoring for signs of vintage-specific fungal infections (e.g., downy mildew and grey rot) and permanent infections that can impact quality, such as fanleaf virus and leafroll virus, which, although they don’t kill the vines, mean digging them up and replanting.

At Cave Spring, winemaker Angelo Pavan has the ins and outs of the harvest down to a fine art.

How do you decide when to pick the grapes?

Angelo: Timing is critical, especially for sparkling wines. You need to understand your climate, and you need to taste the grapes. You want to make sure they aren’t overripe. What we’re looking at ideally is that we’re going to have enough acidity and enough sugar to get balance in the finished wine. We monitor it day by day for sparkling.

Where did you learn about harvesting grapes for bubbly?

In the early days of Cave Spring, in the late 1980s, I went to workshops in New York and Virginia and met with scientists who’d done research on how and when to harvest for sparkling wine. The detail there was much more than in textbooks, and we tasted the juice and the wines to see it in action. That’s when it all started for me. First harvest at Cave Spring was 1986, and I’ve been here since day one. First harvest for sparkling was 2002.
Has your technique changed over the years?

My technique hasn’t changed much. I did experiment a bit with different picking times, picking a bit greener or a bit riper. At the beginning, I was actually nervous about harvesting for sparkling, because it was unknown territory, but those feelings are long gone. Now we can confidently bring in the harvest over a few days.

Is harvest season exciting?

It’s always exciting. Every harvest is different. Even after 30-some-odd years, you can’t predict exactly what’s going to happen. You need to stay on your toes. The season can throw anything at you. At the end of the harvest in October, it’s almost a bit of a letdown. During harvest you’re always moving, always thinking, always making decisions. Then, bang! It’s all in. Then you make the wine, but there you have the luxury of time. It’s like an athlete after a performance — there’s a sense of relief, and of accomplishment, but you miss that rush. Personally, I love harvest.
For winemakers, the harvest is the most exciting time of year – when all the planning and effort come to fruition. Ideally, it’s timed to happen when the grapes have reached the perfect balance of sugar ripeness and physiological ripeness (tannin, colour, flavour, etc.). Harvest times differ for each variety and even across vineyards, where subtle variations in slope and sun exposure can result in marked differences in ripeness. The weather is critical at this point, as late-season rains or hail can devastate a crop. Impending bad weather can trigger an early harvest, as winemakers gamble on sacrificing some of the final quality to guarantee that they have a crop at all.

What about man vs. machine? Machine harvesting is the faster, more economical option, but vineyard size, accessibility and slope can render it impossible. Hand-harvesting is more selective and exact than machines and isn’t limited by weather or terrain. For some wines (botrytis-affected Sauternes is one example), winemakers hand-select individual grapes in multiple passes through the vineyard. No matter the variety or region, the harvest is no nine-to-five job. Winemakers often choose to harvest late at night or early in the morning when temperatures are coolest, to maximize freshness in the grapes.

CRUSH ADVICE

For crushing and pressing, Malivoire’s Shiraz Mottiar espouses a gentle touch and a tailored approach.

When was your first crush (in the wine sense)?

Shiraz: My first true crush was at Inniskillin in 1998. It was part of my internship placement at Brock’s CCOVI (Cool Climate Oenology and Viticulture Institute) program. You never forget your first vintage.

What is crush anyway? Is it a season, or something else?

There’s crush season, and then there’s the actual crushing process. Crush season is the time between when you pick the fruit and when you’ve got your last bit into tank or barrel; the crushing process is when you actually burst open the grapes to get at the juice. The same day we pick the grapes, crush season starts. We’re all about preserving freshness, especially with Pinot and Gamay. Folks are still out there picking the fruit while we’re in the winery starting the crush.

What’s special about free-run juice?

Free-run is the first and purest juice. Vivant Rosé, for instance, is made with free-run and the gentlest pressing of the fruit. Crushing opens the berries, pressing extracts the juice. In a lot of wines, such as the Courtney Gamay, you want structure and phenolics, but Vivant is all about freshness and purity, so there’s no crushing. It’s anti-crushing. It’s direct to press. Most white wines are pressed right after crushing, whereas reds are pressed after maceration and ferment. We pick the fruit for Vivant Rosé in the morning, keep it really cool, and go straight to press.

Malivoire is known for its gravity flow process. Just what is that?

When we go from press to tank, we use gravity, not a pump. Our winery was designed with gravity flow in mind, and we use it as much as we can throughout the process. It’s gentler, with less chance of physical or chemical changes you don’t want the wine to undergo. The biggest impact is when you’re moving things between de-stem and crush and press – this is where you want to move things around as gently as possible.

What’s the best part of crush season?

The whole crush season is fun and exciting. I’d have to say, though, that right before you press reds, and you taste the ferment and get a sense of the wine shaping up into what it will be, that’s when you do your little happy dance.
The harvest may be physically labour intensive, but when it’s over, there's no sigh of relief that the work is done. After grapes are harvested they’re examined on a sorting table to remove any unripe or damaged fruit. For premium wines this is most often done by hand and is critical in assuring the quality of the final wine. The grapes are then crushed and destemmed. Crushing, which differs from pressing, refers only to the relatively gentle breaking of the skins and the release of a relatively small amount of juice. Pressing takes place in – wait for it – a press, which applies a gently increasing pressure to the grapes with an eye toward obtaining as much of the juice as possible while avoiding damaging the pips, whose oils can add an undesirable bitterness. Fermentation, the process through which sugars are converted into alcohol and CO₂ by yeast, imparts much of a wine’s flavour. Grapes for red wines are fermented prior to pressing. The juice is allowed to mix with skins to extract colour and tannin and is pumped over or pressed down to maximize skin contact. Rosé wines can be produced from juice removed from the fermentation of a red wine after a few hours (anywhere from six to 48, depending on the style desired). White wines are pressed before fermentation, to limit skin contact and extraction.

Creekside winemaker Rob Power takes the patient route as he guides wines on a complex ageing journey in barrel and bottle.

How do you decide how long you’ll age a wine?

Rob: It really depends on the wine. Chardonnay and larger, tannic red wines benefit the most from barrel ageing. With Chard, it’s about extracting oak flavouring. With red wines, it’s also about extraction of barrel flavour, but it’s mostly about oxidative ageing and how that impacts the tannic structure of the wine. A wine like Riesling will benefit very much from bottle age, but less so from barrel age; because of the aromatic properties, the best thing to do is get it settled into bottle as soon as possible.

Why does Riesling mature so well in bottle?

The long life of Riesling has to do with the acidic structure. It’s a wine that doesn’t need bottle ageing – it’s delicious when young – but it becomes something differently delicious with age, developing interesting petrol notes, for example. It ages gracefully. I love Riesling young and fresh, but I also have more Riesling in my personal wine cellar than any other white wine. I love the freshness of wines that have not seen oxidative ageing, for instance, and I admire the complexity of wines that have.
When ageing, do you improvise based on the wine’s progress?

Theoretically, you have a clear plan beforehand. It comes down to logistics. We have X amount of barrels and X amount of tank space. So in theory, things are decided very early in the game. But you always leave room for wines that surprise you.

Is there an art to maturing a wine?

The French have a term, élevage, which is like watching a child or student grow. We’re not really the teacher – Mother Nature is the teacher – but we get to watch the wine’s progress and see it along its journey. It’s like taking a photograph. Our job is to take a picture of the vineyard and develop it. You’re thinking to yourself, “I think we got it.” But you have to wait and see.

The final flourish on the vintage is choosing the method and length of time the wine will be aged before bottling – this is where a winemaker’s skill and instinct come into play to determine the flavour profile of the wine. The main consideration is the use or restriction of oxygen in the maturation process. Oxygen helps in the development of complexity and character, but too much can have a negative impact. Wines are typically aged in oak barrels or steel tanks.

Oak barrels allow oxygenation and impart aromas and flavours such as spice, toast and smoke. The barrel size impacts these influences – larger barrels result in less oak and oxygen influence. New oak barrels impart more flavour and texture than used oak barrels.

- American oak allows more oxygen influence and imparts more robust flavours than French oak. It creates creamy-textured wines with flavours such as vanilla and coconut.

- French oak is denser than American oak and allows less oxygen exchange. It generally introduces subtler nuances and creates more elegantly styled wines.

- Stainless steel tanks don’t allow oxygen influence and don’t impart extra flavour or textures to the wines (although oak chips can be added to impart oak tones). They allow more accurate temperature control than oak, permitting winemakers to precisely control the wine’s development, and are ideal for fruity and delicate white wines.
For Thirty Bench winemaker Emma Garner, the art of the blend is a satisfying puzzle of permutations and combinations.

What’s the goal of blending?

Emma: To create something greater than the sum of its parts. At harvest, you see that some vineyards or vineyard blocks have specific characteristics. The goal of the blend is to combine these characteristics to the benefit of the wine. It’s a meticulous process, and it’s a fun thing to do. There are so many different variables and so many different ways the puzzle pieces fit together.

Where did you learn the art of the blend?

It’s an ongoing learning process, to be honest. I studied at Brock, where you do a lot of tastings, and I worked at Hillebrand with J-L Groux, who is known for blending. He is a perpetual student, which is an inspiration. He’s always feverishly scribbling notes and talking about putting wines together. It’s comforting that someone who’s been in the game so long is so open about – and excited by – the fact that he, too, is still learning. You have to maintain an open mind.
How do you decide when to blend?

It depends on the varietal. For whites, we taste in December and January, and the final blend is decided in February; for some Bordeaux varietal reds, it's December the following year. The Double Noir – 60% Gamay and 40% Pinot Noir, inspired by the passe-tout-grains blends of France – is blended around August. It's about tasting the wines and measuring their evolution. Reds take longer to show their evolution.

What's the trickiest thing about blending?

Realizing that there are thousands of potential combinations and not being overwhelmed. Knowing you did your best to bring the strengths together in the most effective way.

What's the most fun thing about blending?

It's like searching for a treasure, really. When you find the combination that really sings, it's a match made in heaven, a special moment.
SOME ASSEMBLAGE REQUIRED: assessing, tasting and blending

As wines age in their various vessels, winemakers continually check in on how they’re progressing, tasting them to plot development and determine quality and readiness for bottling or blending. Blending is a key tool that allows winemakers to use the traits of particular varietals to even out the vagaries of vintage variation, but it’s far more than a failsafe against challenging growing seasons; it’s a way for winemakers to bring their vision to life. Take, for example, some blending options a winemaker might have with a single-vineyard Chardonnay:

- Harvest different parcels at different times to take advantage of different ripeness levels.
- Ferment different parcels in different ways – in individual barrels, in large vats or in stainless steel.
- Age the wines for different periods of time and in different kinds of oak, whether American, French, new or old.

Each choice imparts nuance and complexity to the wines, which, when blended, create a final wine that bears the unique stamp of that winemaker. This is why blending is an art.

BODEGAS BARBADILLO PASTORA MANZANILLA PASADA
DO Manzanilla – Sanlúcar de Barrameda, Spain
TASTING NOTE: 100% Palomino. Appetising concentrated nose showing characterful fruit, orange skin, white flowers, and intense nutty aromas; a rich palate, complex, with lots of apples and a touch of sweet miso. Delicate and open, with long finish, a gorgeous manzanilla. Platinum – Best in Show: Best Value Dry Fortified. Score: 95 (Decanter World Wine Awards, 2017)

TORRES FLORALIS MOSCATEL ORO
Spain
This is the Penedès region’s version of France’s vin doux naturel – vino de licor in Spain. You can expect this example to reflect a delicate, lithe, fragrant style that suggests orange citrus, honey and clove tones. It will be a superb aperitif but can also be served with sweeter desserts or blue-veined cheeses.

ICEWINE

STRATUS RED ICEWINE 2016 ✧
VQA Niagara Lakeshore, Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario
TASTING NOTE: Crafted from 40% Petit Verdot with equal measures of Cabernet Franc and Cabernet Sauvignon harvested on December 15. This has a gorgeous nose suggesting a bouquet of strawberry with strawberry-rhubarb, sweet-and-sour cherry preserves and cranberry sauce. The nose is impressive, yes, but the palate is all the more so – unctuous but not cloying and with excellent balance. A pretty and inviting icewine that will easily delight for another 10–12 years or more. Enjoy with blue cheeses or chocolate-covered strawberries. (Vintages panel, August 2017)

CHAMPAGNE

DUVAL LEROY BLANC DE BLANCS GRAND CRU BRUT CHAMPAGNE 2006
AC, France
TASTING NOTE: This has all the mineral qualities associated with pure Chardonnay. It is crisp, tightly textured and bright. It also has more serious depths of structure, white fruits and richness. This is still ready to age further. Drink now, although it will be better from 2016. Score: 93 (Roger Voss, Wine Enthusiast, March 1, 2015)

SPARKLING WINE

2027 CELLARS QUEENSTON ROAD VINEYARD BLANC DE BLANCS 2013 ✧
Traditional method, VQA St. David's Bench, Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario
TASTING NOTE: ... nose is bright crisp lemon with nice bread notes. This is nice and complex on the palate with citrus leading the way. Under the lemon notes you find golden delicious apple and a mineral note that pushes its way through the bright crisp palate cleansing acidity. This may be one of the best bottles of sparkling wine in the province right now. Score: ★★★★★ (André Proulx, andrewinereview.ca, Nov. 2, 2016)

CAVE SPRING BLANC DE BLANCS BRUT SPARKLING ✧
Traditional method, VQA Niagara Escarpment
This is brilliant example of Ontario’s prowess for sparkling wine. This is an elegant traditional method Chardonnay that delivers great depth of apple, pear and bread tones, in a crisp and long package. In 2012, Cave Spring wine was awarded awarded a Lieutenant-Governor’s Award for their Blanc de Blans Brut Sparkling.

SPARKLING WINE CONT’D

GRAHAM BECK BRUT PINOT NOIR/CHARDONNAY SPARKLING
Traditional method, WO Western Cape, South Africa
TASTING NOTE: Aromas waft out of the warming oven, biscuits and such, then citrus and a palate aching for the party to begin ... a slight Cap Classique funghi-oxidative note emits and then, so much vitality ... Drink 2016-2018. Tasted October 2016. Score: 89

Traditional method, AC, France
TASTING NOTE: A little more of those fresh-baked-bread aromatics waft out of the glass in this Burgundian bubble made from Chardonnay and Pinot Noir. This comes in at about half the price of the more inexpensive Champagnes in our market, so for similar quality, you can think of it as a two-for-one bargain. That’s something worth a toast!

BELCANTO DI BELLUSSI EXTRA DRY PROSECCO DI VALDIBBIADENE SUPERIORE
DOCG, Italy
TASTING NOTE: Quite a vibrant yet mineral expression of upper-tier Prosecco here with both power and finesse. Intense green pear core is shot through with steely, stony minerality that tapers to a long, slow finish of white mushroom and lime. Bright acidity hides some residual sugar so it tastes drier than it is – and perfectly balanced. Much concentration and complexity for the price. Serve it with fish or seafood – ideally, grilled sardines on toast. Score: 92

CLOSSON CHASE K.J. WATSON VINEYARD PINOT GRIS 2016
VOA Four Mile Creek, Niagara-on-the-Lake
TASTING NOTE: An arresting pinot gris, opulent but dry and vibrant. Lush stonefruit, racy acids and great purity are expressed on the palate. Impressively balanced, with a very stony character, stylish and elegant. Nervy with delicate notes of pear, rosehip, chalk and lime. Pleasurably textured with a light oiliness and delivering above the mean complexity. Excellent length. Enjoy now with soft cheeses or wait for the lovely honeyed character that bottle ageing will bring. Score: 92

LEANING POST PINOT NOIR 2013 ✺
VQA Niagara Escarpment

TASTING NOTE: Produced from a blend of fruit sourced from three vineyards – Wismer, Queenston, Lowrey – this is a light-medium bodied, old-world style Pinot Noir. Showcasing aromas and flavours of sun-ripened red berries, earth, herbs and spice, it has a smooth, silky texture. Slight toast notes mingle with notions of earth on the flavourful after-taste. It’s a great match for grilled salmon or duck confit. Score: ★★★★☆ (Susan Desjardins, winecurrent.com, April 24, 2017)

VQA Beamsville Bench, Niagara Escarpment

TASTING NOTE: This wine was hand-picked from the Courtney Block in Malivoire’s estate vineyards on October 10, 2016, and fermented in stainless steel (including a small reserve of whole grape clusters), then transferred to French oak barrels to complete malolactic fermentation and to age for nine months (with 20% of the wine detouring to new oak for five months) before it was bottled, unfiltered, in February of 2017. It’s ripe and savoury, with intense raspberry, strawberry and black cherry fruit, a hint of coffee and a long, fruity finish. (Vintages panel, May 2017)

TASTING NOTE: An all too rare example of Lake Erie North Shore’s potential with Bordeaux variety reds. This is a quite substantial, complex and deep cab franc that is maturing into prime time but holding some vitality. Expect lifted aromas of red currants, raspberry, wood smoke, capers and spice. It’s mid-weight, firm, tart and sour edged with some green tannin; but impressive length. Could still use another two years in bottle but fine now as well. Scores on depth and complexity. TASTING NOTE: There’s a fragrant, honeysuckle-influenced richness to the peach and melon flavors. Crisp on the finish, with lemon zest notes lingering, showing a touch of brewed tea. Drink now. Score: 89 (MaryAnn Worobiec, winespectator.com, 2017)

RYDER CHARDONNAY 2015
Central Coast
TASTING NOTE: This Chardonnay was grown in a handful of Ryder Estate’s cool-climate, ocean-influenced vineyards, and a quarter of the wine was aged in oak. The result is a balanced, gently toasty wine offering ripe melon and pear fruit. Good value in Cali Chard. Pour it with trout cooked on cedar plank or grilled wild mushrooms. (Vintages panel, Jan. 2017)

J. LOHR OCTOBER NIGHT
CHARDONNAY 2015
Arroyo Seco, Monterey County
TASTING NOTE: Rich honeysuckle, marzipan and oak aromas meet bright lemongrass on the nose of this bottling, showing both the fresh and oxidative sides of the grape. Smoked chicken and brioche notes are prominent on the palate, leading to a tangy, botanical, juniper-laced finish. Score: 90 (Matt Kettman, Wine Enthusiast, May 1, 2017)

DECOY CABERNET SAUVIGNON 2015
Sonoma County
(Duckhorn Wine Company)

Don’t be led astray by the cute label: this Cabernet is deadly serious. It’s blended with 9% Merlot, 1% Petite Sirah and 1% Petit Verdot for added complexity and depth, and then aged in 100% French oak barrels to impart extra shading. Hunt for aromas and flavours of blackcurrant, toasty vanilla and campfire smoke, and pair the wine with grilled steaks or game.

HALL MERLOT 2014
Napa Valley

TASTING NOTE: Kathryn and Craig Hall started creating their dream Napa winery in the late 1990s, but had to put their plans on hold for a few years when Kathryn was selected by the Clinton administration to be the American ambassador to Austria. She and Craig returned from Europe in 2001 to continue with building Hall. This 100% Merlot was aged 20 months in 45% new French oak and has all the concentration and ripeness of the glorious 2014 vintage. Intense, deep-set and pure, with impressive black fruit, blackcurrant, blueberry and cassis plus complex spice, vanilla and earth notes adding even more depth. Well balanced, rich and supple. FALERNIA RESERVA CARMENÈRE 2015
Elqui Valley
TASTING NOTE: Last year, I didn’t understand anything about the previous vintage of the 2015 Carmenere Reserve because it’s done in the style of an Amarone: the grapes were harvested two months later than normal, and the wine retained some seven grams of residual sugar. This time, I tasted the wines with winemaker Giorgio Flessati, and he explained it to me; it’s also explained on the back label. WAKEFIELD CABERNET SAUVIGNON 2015
Clare Valley, South Australia
TASTING NOTE: Blackcurrant, blackberry, cassis, spearmint and a savoury herbal note dominate on the nose of this Clare Valley red, with modest lacquer/vanilla notes hinting at oak. On the dry but fruit-forward, full-bodied palate the fruit is dark and chewy, highlighting blackberry, raspberry and plum notes while supported by anise, mint and secondary woody notes. Overall this is a sophisticated, silky Cabernet Sauvignon that brings mild tannins and a smooth, pleasant finish and that’s drinking beautifully now. ISOLE E OLENA CEPPARELLO 2013
IGT Toscana
TASTING NOTE: Hands down beautiful, the 2013 Cepparello is a creation of stunning elegance and balance. A pure expression of Sangiovese, this wine undergoes a sophisticated oak regime that sees ageing in various barrel sizes and barrique of various ages. It lives 18 months of its life in French and 3% American oak before being released. This vintage (that is cooler compared to 2012 and 2011) delivers an exceptionally soft and mellow bouquet with slightly sweet sensations of ripe cherry and fragrant blue flower. Soft tones of spice and cinnamon bring up the rear. The wine is medium to full in terms of body weight, and the finish is driven by cool tones of balsam and menthol herb. BANFI STILNOVO GOVERNO ALL’USO 2015
IGT Toscana
TASTING NOTE: Governo all’Uso is a 14th-century Tuscan technique in which around 30% of the grapes remain unharvested while the harvested portion ferments for about three weeks. The grapes left on the vine are collected in mid-October and used to begin a second fermentation. The wine is then aged in barrel. In this example, you get a wine of notable complexity, depth and character. Floral, soft and lush, this is an easy-drinking wine with impressive ripe and dried dark fruit, cedar and vanilla tones.

SANTA MARGHERITA RIPASSO VALPOLICELLA SUPERIORE 2014 DOC
TASTING NOTE: Santa Margherita has jumped into the world of Valpolicella with their inaugural vintage (2014) Ripasso and did they ever succeed! A blend of 40% Corvina, 40% Corvinone, and 20% Rondinella, the wine was re-passed over the pomace of their not-yet released Amarone and allowed to ferment once again for two weeks before it was barrel aged for nine months prior to bottling. Dry with a great blend of savoury and fruity notes, the dried dark fruits, plum, and baking spices greet the nose and palate. Very well balanced with fresh acidity and texture making it ideal with rich risotto and pasta dishes, braised veal shank, and aged firm cheese. Did you know silver is the most naturally reflective metal? That’s one of the many topics you can ponder with your wine buddies as you sip this fruity, creamy Chardonnay and contemplate its faithful representation of Niagara-on-the-Lake. And that’s why silver makes such effective mirrors, you can add, reflectively.
