

Jayne Morrish

Jayne Morrish is the Knowledge Mobilization Officer at Brock University's Lifespan Development Research Institute and Office of Research Services. In her role, Jayne leads knowledge mobilization, partnership work, capacity building and community engagement initiatives at the Lifespan Institute. Jayne has completed a SSHRC funded Master's Degree in Lifespan Development from Brock University, where her research focused on adolescent risk-taking as related to activity engagement, a Bachelors of Health from York University, the Knowledge Translation Professional Certificate from the University of Toronto, the Mobilize YU Certificate from York University, and the Leadership Niagara Certificate. Jayne has received various awards for her work, including the Certificate of Academic Excellence from the Canadian Psychological Association for her Master's thesis and a 40 Under Forty Award.

Dr. Yasmin Khan

Dr. Yasmin Khan is a consultant physician at Public Health Ontario and Assistant Professor in the Department of Medicine at the University of Toronto. Dr. Kahn has completed a Doctor of Medicine at the University of Western Ontario, a Master of Public Health (Community Health and Epidemiology) at the University of Toronto, and an Emergency Medicine Fellowship at the University of Toronto. At Public Health Ontario, Dr. Kahn's work is focused on communicable diseases, and emergency preparedness and response. Dr. Kahn's research interests include: health emergency preparedness, performance measurement for public health emergency preparedness (PHEP), communication and collaboration between public health and acute care, the role of social media in PHEP, and methods and applications of Integrated Knowledge Translation for research in PHEP. Dr. Kahn's previous publications are available on PubMed.gov.

