

Lures belong in your tacklebox, NOT your inbox.

In a phishing scam, a criminal sends you a legitimate-looking email with a link to a counterfeit website. The objective is to trick you into volunteering private information.

If you receive an email that you're not sure about, check with Brock's Information Technology Services website to see if your peers have reported it as well. If not, let us know and do the whole community a favour.

Never respond to a suspicious email. If in doubt, report and delete.
