D The Last Days of Judas Iscariot by Stephen Adly Guirgis
The Last Days of Judas Iscariot isn't just a long-ago fable, it's a sassy exploration of sin and unconditional love and speaks to all about guilt, regret, and redemption. Set in a satirical version of a contemporary American Law Court, a pageant of comic saints and villains play a tug-of-war over the appeal for Judas' case. Leighton Williams, one of Ontario's most exciting emerging directors who is visiting Brock for this special production, has a profound respect for the comedy, the oratory, the smug corruption, and the tragic counterpoint to activism in Stephen Adly Guirgis' award-winning play. Directed by Leighton Williams.

V Walker Cultural Leader Mary Mattingly: Proposals
 Public lecture presented by the 2021-22 Walker Cultural Leader Series, Department of Visual Arts.
Combining a visual-art practice with environmental activism and education, Mattingly wrote a manifesto that opens with the statement, “Art can transform people’s perceptions about value, and collective art forms can reframe predominant ideologies.” Mattingly’s determination to create alternative means of survival in the face of a dystopian future has resulted in various projects, from wearable cocoons that can store water and solar power to alternative urban infrastructure—such as the Flock House Project (2012), for which she constructed portable living units that moved throughout New York City.

D Red Bike by Caridad Svich
Presented by the Department of Dramatic Arts, Red Bike is an imaginative, magical journey into the mind of a child. Through an epic bike ride, on their beloved red bike, an eleven-year-old child reflects on the small town they see before them. As they venture into the outer edges of town, they are faced with a challenge unlike they have ever experienced, causing them to see the world in a new way. This production brings the poetic words of playwright Caridad Svich to life with through the movement and physical theatre explorations of an ensemble of six actors. Directed by Mike Griffin.
