Emphasizing interconnectivity and relationality, posthumanism posits that our entanglements radically constitute the subject—we exist only as entangled.

What is the fate of education in a posthuman age? What does it mean to educate for the posthuman condition? Are there new educational methods and ways of thinking we need to embrace? How do the various entanglements that constitute us transform how we learn?