Brock University continues to address gaps in representation through new decolonization and EDI-related positions, such as the Director of Indigenous Educational Studies Programs, the Associate Vice-President, Equity, Diversity, and Inclusion, and staff positions within the Black Student Success Centre. To prepare for the latter, Black staff and EDI-related staff across the institution planned and launched the Centre in Fall 2023. In addition to enhancing the personal, academic, and professional flourishing of Black students at Brock, the Centre also created programming for Niagara secondary students, via the Black Secondary School Symposium. Training and inclusive spaces for equity-denied researchers and EDI-related staff were provided by The Office of HRE which trains on areas such as anti-racism, workplace harassment, intercultural communication, and understanding the Human Rights Code. The office funded intensive training for EDI-related staff on Transformative Mediation and Facilitated Dialogues to Address Sexual Harm in Fall 2022 and Spring 2023. It also launched an EDI Community of Practice to create a space where EDI-related staff can learn and collaborate in Fall 2023. The Office also provides resolution services, referrals, "culturally responsive and affirming material supports", and programming to foster an inclusive community such as Black History/African Heritage Month and Brock 2SLGBTQ+ Pride Month 2023 programming. The Centre for Pedagogical Innovation (CPI) provides curriculum support focused on virtual, in-person, asynchronous, and synchronous formats, facilitating attention to accessibility and technology-enabled learning. CPI also provides support on trauma-informed practices, training from an Indigenous perspective, and facilitated an open educational resources adoption grant program to enhance access to learning materials in 2023. Through CPI, and the Office of HRE, Graduate Studies and Postdoctoral Affairs, and Learning Services, graduate students were provided professional development programming, such as writing cafés and workshops on navigating difficult conversations or time management. At the faculty and department level, on-going EDI initiatives highlight systemic barriers and the experiences of equity denied groups in higher education and beyond. This includes panels and discussion circles on decolonization and anti-Black racism (Faculty of Applied Health Sciences Anti-Racism Task Force); ongoing mentorship and sessions through the Women in Leadership Initiative, which received the 2023 YW Community Partnership award from the YWCA Niagara Region (Faculty of Social Science); professional development and a symposium on Coding, Computational Modelling and Equity in Mathematics Education Symposium (Faculty of Mathematics and Science and Faculty of Education); a newly launched community of practice on Universal Design for Learning (Applied Disabilities Studies); an Indigenous Leaders Speaker Series session (Goodman School of Business and the Office of Indigenous Engagement); the Imagining Black and Indigenous virtual event to celebrate International Women's Day (Centre for Women's and Gender Studies, Social Justice Research Institute, and PACHRED); a workshop and roundtable discussion focused on Indigenous game developers and representation in games (Hadiyaʔdagénhahs First Nations, Métis and Inuit Student Centre and the Centre for Digital Humanities); workshops, presentations, and community engagement during Indigenous Peoples Awareness Week (Hadiyaʔdagénhahs); the 2023 Niagara Social Justice Forum, which focused on pedagogies of care (Master of Arts in Social Justice and Equity Studies program and the Social Justice Research Institute); the Decolonial Reading Circle (Vice-Provost, Indigenous Engagement); an Innovation Social on Innovation in Women's Equity; a panel featuring recipients of the Indigenous Research Grant; and a Gathering on Indigeneity, Neurodevelopmental Disabilities and Mental Health (Research Enterprise). Several efforts were co-facilitated with external partners.
